CME - "Hospital Acquired Infections - Diagnosis & Surveillance"

On 17.11.2017 at IGMC & RI, Auditorium

Hospital Acquired Infection (HAI) is a probable consequence of hospitalization. It is also understood that every intervention with a medical device or surgery need not result in infection. Given the possibility of HAI it is imperative that a healthcare institution monitors the infection rates prevalent in their setting. The regular monitoring of infection rates helps to formulate evidence-based policies to reduce morbidity and mortality due to HAI. The guidelines of CDC NHSN 2017 play a large role in the surveillance of infection rates. This CME intends to create awareness of these guidelines amongst postgraduate medical students and health care professionals.

The Department of Microbiology, IGMCRI, welcomes you to an informative and interactive learning experience on HAI.
